Growing its balance sheet by a factor of 10x and now having crossed the critical $10 Billion asset threshold, the renamed Banc of California (NYSE:BANC) has touted itself as a "community reinvestment" lender. The bank has cultivated relationships with politicians and celebrities to project an air of success and credibility as California's Bank. Investors have increasingly adopted these promotional narratives and BANC's shares had doubled over the past year.

The PR effort hit new highs in August when BANC agreed to pay $100 million, roughly 10% of its market cap, for soccer stadium naming rights to the LA Football Club (which just happens to be part-owned by Steven's brother Jason Sugarman and Jason's father-in-law Peter Guber).
